

George Washington | Rules of Civility

George Washington, as a teenager, copied the famous Rules of Civility. These rules were not invented by George, but he tried to live by them. The language used in the early 1700s seems old-fashioned to us now but most of the ideas are still important. Can you re-write them for today?

E-mail us with the number of the rule and the way you would re-write it for today.
